Research Interests

I specialize in the study of Active Galactic Nuclei (AGN), with a focus on variability, multiband surveys, and obscuration processes in both local and high-redshift AGN. My research combines X-ray and multiband data to investigate obscuration processes, the physical drivers of AGN variability, and the co-evolution of AGN with their host galaxies. I also study optical and infrared emission line diagnostics, such as [Ne V], a strong tracer of AGN activity, to characterize these systems and their evolution across cosmic time. In addition, I work extensively with Big Data, applying AI and machine-learning techniques to AGN catalogs for population and evolution studies, with the broader goal of advancing our understanding of AGN physics and cosmic evolution. Beyond research, I am deeply committed to mentoring students and early-career researchers, fostering their growth in both astrophysics and data-driven science.
